Sir:

After working 30 years for the Department of Defense, I want to voice my objection that will require my working under the new National Security Personnel System. Granted, if the current system needs some mending, then mend it. But to come out with a new personnel system so radical in design, the impact on long term employment and future hiring will be devastating.

I'm sure you have all kinds of letters elaborating on the expected ill affects of the NSPS. I am not going to be one of those who give you a point- by- point run-down on my objections. I just want to voice my opinion to the ridiculous proposal in general and express my concerns as to the quality of future government employment. The new system and current management is not going to make for a healthy long-term work environment.

Fortunately, I'll put up with NSPS and long as I can stand it, then I'll retire.
