I am writing to comment on the subject section of the NSPS. It is "very important" that a precise definition of "good performance" is defined in writing. Not all managers are good leaders & are unable to motivate, inspire, & influence staff to achieve goals. Some managers may misuse power & authority, or use it inappropriately by ignoring ideas of certain employees, or providing little recognition to those they dislike. Placing staffing & work conditions squarely in the hands of management without "equal representation of the employee" adversely ignores the rights of the employee.

Sincerely,

Cynthia Snyder
